NO VETERAN OF CIVIL WAR IN 1939 PARADE

Long Record Finally is Broken, But Arrangements for the Observance of Memorial Day are Completed

This year for the first time Auburn will have no Civil war veteran to take part in the Memorial day services. With the passing of Corporal "Uncle Billy" Stafford only last Friday, the last of the Civil war soldiers rejoined his comrades.

Exercises will be held this year at 10 o'clock in the morning at the southwest corner of the court square, if the weather permits. In case of rain, they will take place in the assembly room of the court house. Attorney S. C. Cleland of Fort Wayne, a well known orator and Legionnaire, will make the address. The Auburn high school band will play, there will be a short parade, and at the services the roll will be read of the dead of the various veterans' organizations.

On Monday, organizations made wreaths, which will be placed on graves of the soldier dead and auxiliary members early Tuesday.

Bass-Lawton Post Of The GAR Passes Out Of Existence; Allen County's Civil War Role Cited

BY HENRY M. FLOWERS

WITH mustering of Lieut. John T. Young into the practically filled ranks of soldiers of the Union Armies who have gone to their eternal rewards, Bass-Lawton Post No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, has passed out of existence. Mr. Young not only was post commander but was the only member during recent months.

The years have ended in this city what once was an organization of war veterans as powerful and with almost as many members as the American Legion. At the beginning of the Twentieth Century Fort Wayne had four GAR posts. Membership of local GAR posts at one time totaled approximately 1,400 Civil War veterans.

The veterans' room in the Court House—long the meeting place of Bass-Lawton Post—no longer will reverberate with stories of heroism and other adventurous reminiscences of the boys who fought in blue under the Stars and Stripes between 1860 and 1865.

Death Wipes Out Ranks.

Death has taken away Allen County's few remaining aged veterans at a rapid rate during the last two years, and now it is inevitable that within a short time all Civil War veterans of this territory as well as of the Nation will be gone. They are so rare now that any surviving veteran is somewhat of a matter of public interest and concern.

As Richard Foss, 95-year-old Civil War veteran, came here last year from Washington, D. C., to reside with a niece, Mrs. A. O. Buchanan, 2610 Smith Street, Fort Wayne and Allen County still can lay claim to at least one surviving warrior of the 1860s. However, Mr. Foss is not a member of the local GAR post. Cyrus Young, who resides on the Wells County side of Zanesville—located on the Wells-Allen County line—is the only other surviving aged veteran known to reside in the Allen County vicinity.

County's Part In War Told.

This seems an opportune time to recount briefly the part Fort Wayne and Allen County played in winning the Civil War for the North and thus re-uniting the Union. The following history was rewritten from "History of Fort Wayne," by the late B. J. Griswold:

Allen County sent 4,103 men to the battlefields during the Civil War. Of this number 489 lost their lives. This county paid $550,145 in war bounties, gave $73,863 for relief of families of soldiers and added $2,000 for miscellaneous expenses. Allen County paid $20 bounty per month which was in addition to $25 monthly payment by the U. S. Government and $2 by the state. County commissioners also paid to each married enlisted man $4 each month to aid in support of his family and $1 for each child under 15. Soldiers received $13 before they entered the service.

Answer Call To Colors.

This county's war effort started with calling of a patriotic mass meeting April 15, 1860, three days after Fort Sumter was fired on. The meeting was held in the Hedekin House at call of Mayor Randall. Resolutions were adopted which declared in part: "In the present crisis of our national affairs, there should be but one party in the state of Indiana, and that party should stand pledged before the country to uphold and sustain, by all the means in its power, the National administration, enforcing obedience to the laws preserving the public property and vindicating the honor of the flag."

Enrollment of volunteers was started immediately by Maj. William H. Link, Capt. George Humphrey and Capt. William P. Segur who headed the lists with their names. The volunteer lists later were placed in offices of Withers and Morris, Judge Hanna and of the collector of the canal.

Old Veteran Dies

Daniel R. Wisel.

Last Steuben County Civil War Vet Dies

Influenza Brings Death Of Daniel R. Wisel, 101, After Vivid Career.

(Special to The News-Sentinel)

ANGOLA, Ind., Jan. 4.—Daniel R. Wisel, 101, Steuben County's last Civil War Veteran died at 7 p.m. Wednesday night at his farm home in Salem Township.

Wisel, who would have been 102 on March 9, was Steuben County's oldest citizen and the second white child born in the county. He had been in good health until the past few weeks when he had gradually grown weaker. Death was attributed to influenza.

Uncle Dan, as many affectionately called him, had lived on his farm for 63 years. In 1858 he, with two cousins, drove an ox team and covered wagon to California. They were five months on the road after they crossed the Mississippi River. Mr. Wisel once stated that he first voted in 1860 in California for Abraham Lincoln and had voted in every presidential election since that time.

In 1862 Mr. Wisel came back from California and joined the Union Army. He wanted to join the cavalry but there was no opportunity to do so from Steuben County, so he went to Edgerton, Ohio, and joined the Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry and served until the close of the war. His right ear lobe was once grazed by a bullet and another time the right side of his jaw was scratched by a bullet. He had two horses shot from beneath him and was under fire 28 times.

Saw Grant, Lee, Lincoln.

Near the close of the war Mr. Wisel was in the Battle of the Wilderness and in skirmishes about Petersburg and Fredericksburg, Va. He sat on a fence near the famous apple tree where Grant and Lee were negotiating preliminary terms of surrender. Wisel said he was unable to hear from his location but could see the meeting clearly.

Returning home through Washington, on a furlough, he saw President Lincoln.

Funeral services will be held Saturday at 1 p.m. in the Union Chapel near Salem Center. Burial will be in the Wright Cemetery.

Surviving are one son Elmer Wisel, and one daughter, Mrs. Cora Zent, of Salem Township, one grandchild and five great-grandchildren. A military service will be conducted at the grave by the Angola Post of the American Legion.

A Little Town

I like to live in a little town
Where the trees meet over the street
And you wave your hand and say hello
To every one you meet.
I like to stop for a minute
Outside the grocery store;
And hear the kindly gossip
Of the folks who live next door.
For life is interwoven
With the friends you learn to know
And you feel their joys and sorrows
As they daily come and go.
So I'm glad to live in a little town,
And I care no more to roam;
For every house in a little town
Is more than a house—it's home.

Fort Wayne Honors Its War Dead With Parade, Ceremonie

Sons of Union Veterans member places wreath at Cenotph in Lindenwood Cemetery for GAR.

Statistics Show 119 Veterans Will Die By Midnight

WASHINGTON, May 30.—(A.P.)—The Nation's honors of this Memorial Day go to the unknown soldier whose marble tomb rises on the Arlington hills across the Potomac—a wreath from President Roosevelt... a program of soft music, word tributes . . . an unending line of hushed, respectful visitors.

But in Government offices, case after case of records tells of a host of known and unknown soldiers . . . a study of America and its wars . . . a picture of death and dollars.

Over at the Veterans Administration, for instance, a statistician can tell you in less time than it would take to dodge a bomb that 119 American veterans will die before midnight.

Ninety-one, on the daily average, will be survivors of the World War.

Twenty-three will be Spanish-American veterans.

Four from the Civil War.

One from the Indian wars.

How much has the United States paid to veterans and dependents of all its wars? The big machines click, click, click as they add. Here is the total:

Slightly over $14,000,000,000.

The statistical story of our soldiers and their fate is jotted on great charts. If you have a pencil, you can take it down.

Men killed in action in the World War—39,362.

Wounded—234,300.

The World War doughboy, who wore a steel helmet and was one of history's gamest fighters, now is 47 years old, according to the averages . . . The Spanish-American veteran is 65 . . . The Civil War campaigner is 95.

Here in Washington you can learn, too, that 30,000 Americans lie in cemeteries in France and Flanders —along the Somme, near Ypres, in the Meuse-Argonne, at St. Mihiel.

Are the poppies blooming there today?

MORIAL DAY MEMORIES

VETER more recent wars now occupy the honor place held exclusively by the Civil War soldiers, those survivors of been called history's bloodiest conflict. Time was when the Boys in Blue were much in evidence on Russell, Churubusco; Josiah King, Fort Wayne, and the following whose addresses were not secured: J. D. Cummins, Thomas Davis, Samuel Karisder, Austin S. Corpe, Jonathan Kellett, A. Miller, Enos Reed, Elijah Inhose, Harris Shobe, W. A. Bryan, Frank Kickley, William Carbaugh, A. C. Engle and D. Long.

Organized in Fort Wayne.

The old regiment made a wonderful record during the four years of its participation in the civil war. It was recruited and organized in Fort Wayne, where the members met for the first time under canvas, at old Camp Allen, which is now Swinney park. In its ranks were hundreds of Fort Wayne and Allen county boys, and the word "boys" is meant literally in this case, for in many companies not a soldier borne on its rolls was of voting age, with the possible exception of the officers.

It received its baptism of fire at Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862, and through the long weary years of an embattled republic, its guidons fluttered in 14 different states. Serving in the armies of the west, under Thomas, Grand and Sherman, the old Eighty-eighth Indiana fought its way through the south, leaving its dead and wounded on more than a score of bloody battlefields. Some sleep in the National cemetery of Chattanooga, others in eternal bivouac at Chickamauga, where the thin blue line helped to save the wreck of the union army at Snodgrass Hill. Others await the last call where Missionary Ridge was wrested from the foe, and still others sleep where they fell on the slopes of old Lookout.

Some of the lost dropped from the ranks where dying eyes watched the advance of the battle flag at Stone River. On many fields monuments to the unknown dead include boys of the Eighty-eighth, who disappeared in the crucible of war, leaving to their surviving comrades only memories of ruddy faces in the firelight's glow and the spirit of a comradeship forged in the flame of battle which would never die. From Dalton to Atlanta where for months the rattle of small arms and boom of cannon never ceased, the colors of the old regiment were in the forefront of the union advance. Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Tullahoma, Buzzard's Roost, added to the casualties, which were further swelled by battle sacrifices at Peach Tree Creek and the siege and capture of Atlanta.

Was in "The March to the Sea."

The flash of bayonets in the sky and gleam athwart the guns told the story of the "march to the sea." Thence turning northward, the columns in blue advanced through the Carolinas, where Averysboro and Bentonville witnessed the last despairing effort of the foe to prevent the uniting of the forces of the union. The end was clearly at hand, for Grant held Lee firmly grasped at Richmond and the navy swept the entire coast.

Serving under Sherman, the old Eighty-eighth Indiana endured hunger and sickness, the heat and cold of summer suns and winter sleet, waded swamps and rivers, shivered on soggy camp grounds, and for miles laid corduroy roads through vast stretches of almost impenetrable wilderness in the Carolinas. A vast cheering with a multitude of caps thrown into the air swept along the great marching column when word came that Lee had surrendered at Appomattox. On April 26, 1865, after nearly four years of campaigning had made war a hideous element in the war torn republic, General Joseph E. Johnston and his confederate army surrendered to Sherman at Durham Station, N. C., and the fighting was over. The Eighty-eighth Indiana, veterans all, then marched proudly down Pennsylvania avenue in the great review at Washinfton, D. C., where for two days the tread of marching feet shook the nation's capital.

Many Died From Pestilence.

But one element brought sadness to these men, for aside from the vacancies in the ranks caused by men who had died gloriously in battle, there were still others who with no chance for distinguished service, were captured by the enemy only to starve to death in southern stockades and who joined the martyr throng asleep beneath the pines at Andersonville.

But whether they died in the battle front, from sickness or disease brought on by exposure to a pestilential southern climate, or in the hands of the enemy, they never failed at their post of duty and the old Eighty-eighth is proud of their memory.

Exhibit Old Battle [illegible]

Features of the program were the presentation of the [illegible] which the Eighty-eighth followed in action in more than 30 battles of the southland. Torn and frayed, the silken remnants clinging to the poles from which they proudly waved in days gone by, the shot, torn and smoke-stained standards brought tears to the eyes of their old defenders as they were carried into the hall and saluted. Comrade Noah Knepper, who had carried the battle flag into action until shot down at Chickamaugua, was present to again renew allegiance to the old colors.

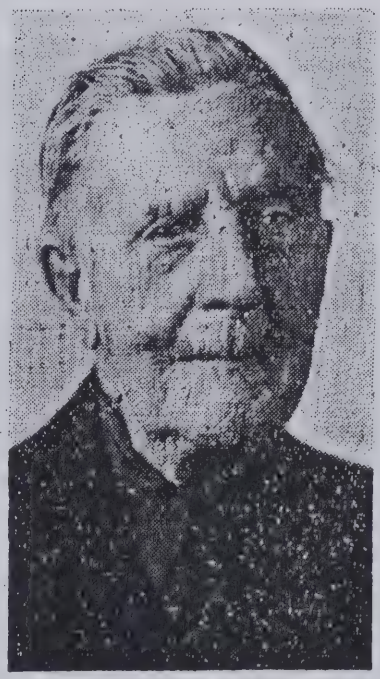
Another feature which thrilled the veterans was the display of the regimental bugle, which had sounded from Perryville to Missionary Ridge and from Atlanta t othe sea. It was blown by Trumpeter Snyder, who returning from the war took the old instrument with him to Ohio. Recently Mrs. Samule Taylor, custodian of the relic-room at the court house, learned of its whereabouts, and through Mr. Snyder's son-in-law the old relic was given into the keeping of the city from which it was carried to the civil war in 1861.

The veterans of the Eighty-eighth were also presented with a gavel to be used at their meetings, which has more than usual historical interest. It was made of southern oak taken from Chickamaugua battlefield, and mountain laurel, obtained from Lookout mountain.

Judge Ballou Speaks.

Following the trumpet call to assembly and the singing of "America," the president gave a short talk to those before him. Judge W. N. Ballou then gave his address to the veterans. Miss Gertrude Fox sang several "War Songs," and Frank L. Riley several Irish numbers.

Past Commanders Capt. W. A. Kolsey and Judge S. M. Hench gave short replies to the speaker of the program. The program closed with tfhe reading off the honor roll of regimental dead, and a vocal solo, "The Vacant Chair," by Mrs. Charles Bassett.



JOHN GEISINGER

came to Indiana about 1815, when Indians were still very numerous and wild game abounded in this territory.

Last September he and his wife, Mrs. Sarah Lucinda Geisinger, who survives, observed their sixty-seventh wedding anniversary. They were married September 17, 1872, in Concord township and went to housekeeping in a log cabin. Mr. Geisinger was a farmer until about 1895, when he and his wife came to Auburn to live. Twenty-five years ago they moved to Garrett to reside with the daughter.

Although in 1864 he cast his first presidential ballot for Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Geisinger voted the democratic ticket afterward.

Until he suffered tho stroke, Mr. Geisinger was remarkably agile for his years, walking uptown often in addition to working about the house. Although his hearing and sight had failed, he could hear well enough to carry on a conversation and could read with the aid of a reading glass.

Survivors besides the widow, who is past eighty-six years of age, the son and the daughter, are four grandchildren. Berwyn Brown of Kalamazoo, Mich., Earl Geisinger of Idaho, Mrs. Helen Hanselman of Fort Wayne, and Dorothy Brown of Garrett and one great grandchild, Josephine Geisinger, a daughter of Earl Geisinger.

One son, Alfred, died in the state of Washington in 1932. The aged man had three brothers and three sisters, all of whom passed away after living to ripe old ages.

Mr. Geisinger attended the Church of Christ.

Here are the instructor and students of a district school in DeKalb County as they appeared in 1898. DeKalb County rich in covered bridge heritage

By Jeff Jones

Since its formation in May of 1837, DeKalb County has been home to five covered bridges of varying styles and construction. With the passage of time, all but one of those bridges are gone, victims of either Mother Nature or mankind.

The first courthouse was built in 1843, and the first railroad in the county was completed in 1856. It wasn't until 1866 that the first covered bridge was finished.

As the county began to grow and prosper, the demand for more roads and bridges increased. Newville (which was also known as Vienna) was the site of the first covered bridge in DeKalb County.

St. Joseph's River, the largest body of water in the county, necessitated the need for several bridges, with three of the covered bridges spanning it.

William Valleau and a Griswold (first name unknown) were the primary builders of the bridge at Newville, which was longest of the five covered bridges. The Newville bridge was believed to be 200' in length and 20' wide. Unknown forces led to the bridge's destruction sometime between 1872 and 1882.

Valleau was no stranger to DeKalb County. He was one of three contractors for the second courthouse, which was completed in 1864. Valleau's partners, John A. McKay and Alpheau Wheelock, were also major contributors in DeKalb Countys' covered bridge history.

Wheelock and McKay finished work on the Dills bridge at Webster's Mills, which was located on present-day County Road 64, in 1868.

Although it wasn't completed until 1868, work on a bridge over the St. Joseph's River at Webster's Mills started three years earlier. William Henderson was appointed as superintendent of the project in 1865 by county commissioners. One year later, John W. Dils (as spelled in the commissioners' record), apparently addressed county officials to complete Henderson's work.

By 1868, Wheelock and McKay were hired to construct the Dills bridge. Once completed, the Dills bridge was 154 feet in length, 15 feet wide and 13 feet high. Eight foot overhangs were located at each entrance to the bridge.

The bridge's location, Webster's Mills, was named for a water-powered gristmill, which was situated on the river.

The bridge was a victim of the weather and mankind in its 100 year lifespan. Strong winds blew off the roof in the spring of 1948. That roof was replaced and the bridge continued to handle traffic. A second incident sealed the fate of the Dills bridge. In 1967, a truck attempting to cross the river apparently struck a roof support, causing the collapse of the roof. The bridge lasted one year in its topless condition until it was replaced by a concrete bridge in 1968.

A third bridge was built across the St. Joseph's River in 1873 on what is now County Road 68. The Spencerville bridge, DeKalb County and northern Indiana's lone covered bridge, was completed that year by Wheelock and McKay.

Wheelock and McKay built the Spencerville bridge with Michigan White Pine at a total cost of $4458. The structure is 146 feet in length and was built using the Smith Truss, Variant Fourt design.

In its lifetime, the bridge has been threatened many times by high river waters, but each time, the Spencerville bridge held firm. Major repairs were performed on the span in 1916, 1920, 1922, 1954, 1970 and 1983, the final of which enabled the bridge to remain open to automobile traffic.

Pennsylvania native George A. Woerntz gave DeKalb County its final two covered bridges-the Houlton and the Cedar Chapel. Both bridges were completed in 1884 with the Howe Truss design.

The Houlton bridge, named for John Houlton, who is believed to be the county's first settler. The Houlton bridge was located on what is now County Road 4-A (Bellefountain Road) southeast of Hamilton.

The Houlton bridge measured 103 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 12 feet high with a seven foot overhang at each end. The bridge was built with French louvered sides, cupolas (domes) at each end and wide Blue Poplar boards at the entrances.

As the years passed, the cupolas were removed from the bridge and siding replaced the louvered appearance. The bridge was destroyed by a suspicious fire in May 1963 and was replaced by a concrete structure.

Following his work on the Houlton, Woerntz traveled to Butler Township, south of Garrett to build the Cedar Chapel bridge over Cedar Creek on what is now County Road 68.

The Cedar Chapel bridge differed from the Houlton in that it did not have the louvered sides or cupolas. It was 110 feet long, 12 feet wide, 13 feet high and had seven foot overhangs at each end.

County Road 68 was designated to have an overpass at Interstate 69, and the bridge was saved from destruction as the DeKalb County Historical Society purchased it for one dollar from the Indiana State Highway Department (now known as the Indiana Department of Transportation). The bridge was moved from the location in 1966 to a wooded area southeast of its original home.

Until 1972, the bridge remained in the wooded area. Attempts to turn the site into a county park failed and the bridge was sold to the Conner Prairie Pioneer Settlement, located south of Noblesville, Indiana for $1343.

Only the Spencerville bridge remains for the new generation to enjoy. The others have long since disappeared. their memory relegated to history, both written and photographic. While newer, stronger bridges now support increased loads, there is no substitute for the appearance and appeal of a covered bridge.

DeKalb County Historian John Martin Smith researched the history of covered bridges in the county prior to the celebration of the Spencerville Covered Bridge's 100th birthday in 1973. The information used in this article comes from the Covered Bridge Centennial book.

The Cedar Chapel bridge crossed Cedar Creek on County Road 68 in southwestern DeKalb County. The Cedar Chapel bridge was one of two bridges built by George Woerntz in 1884, and was very similar in design to the Houlton. The bridge was 110 feet long and 12 feet wide. In 1966, the bridge was removed from its location and later purchased by the Conner Prairie Pioneer Settlement south of Noblesville in 1972. Photo contributed by Joe Donaldson.

The bridge was approximately 200 feet long and 20 feet wide. It was the first covered bridge in the county, and was destroyed by unknown forces between 1872 and 1882, according to research compiled by DeKalb County Historian John Martin Smith. The bridge, which was built in 1884, was removed in 1966 to make way for a new one over Cedar Creek. The bridge was located on a road that was to have an overpass at Interstate 69. Much of the siding and flooring was removed from the Cedar Chapel bridge to lessen the weight load during its re-location.
